CREDIT UNIONS VS BANKS

Want to really know the differences between credit unions and banks? Get the real scoop on why credit unions are better for the consumer than banks.

- Credit unions are not-for-profit cooperatives, owned by their members who save and borrow there. They exist solely to serve those members, with no stockholders or bank holding companies to enrich.
- Credit unions are owned by their members. In addition to being an owner, each credit union member, regardless of how much he or she has on deposit, has an equal vote in elections. Credit unions are democracy in action!
- Credit unions are tax-exempt. The benefits of this tax-exempt status as a not-for-profit cooperative are returned to members in the form of higher rates on savings, lower fees and lower loan rates.
- Banks are for-profit institutions run by officers and directors who are legally bound to make decisions in the best interest of the stockholders.
- Directors of banks customarily receive director fees, per diem, stock options and other perks. Members of credit union boards and committees are truly volunteers. They receive no compensation for their service and commitment. Banks are run by officers and directors chosen by owners, stockholders and bank holding companies, many of which are located out-of-state.

Credit unions and banks both exist to provide financial services. However, their similarities end there and the differences that make credit unions unique begin to show. Check out all the benefits RCU has to offer at www.riverviewcu.com.
